

House Without Borders | Architectural Studio Chado
Rostov Region | Russia | 2014

© Inna Kablukov

Saturday
Samstag
Samedi

14107

House Without Borders | Architectural Studio Chado
Rostov Region | Russia | 2014

Modern homes have long ceased to fit into the idea of "four walls", or "box." Now the environment is free to come into the house, and the house seamlessly expands its boundaries, capturing the surrounding area.

One of the most effective and common methods to achieve this effect: A panoramic windows, which makes the boundary of property and implicit mixed. In the same project architects have gone further. House "came out" not only for by glazing, but also due to structural elements of the roof extending the scope of the building, creating a complex three - dimensional game. Sami these elements deserve special attention, as performed here is not only functional but also decorative, and even trailblazing function being the basis of architectural and artistic composition.

